Letter from Stafford

[Correspondence of the Alexandria Gazette.] RICHLAND, March 13, 1890 -- As fishing season is about to commence and the ducking season has just ended, we think a few lines in regard to Stafford county will not be inappropriate. This county is washed on one side by the Potomac river, 15 miles, and on the south by the Rappahannock river. It has four creeks running through the county; namely, Chappwamsle, Accokeek, Aquia and Potomac. These streams abound in fish and wild fowl, and the lands border ing on them are very productive. Boats can lie along the banks of these creeks and load with marl where the banks are 60 feet high and are of solid deposits of decomposed shells. Persons riding through the county have very little idea of the value of Stafford ands, as the main roads are generally on ridges and high places. The wonder is, in passing elong, how the people manage to live; and here the saying originated that a dog would have to lean against a tree in order to There are three fisheries in the county which catch an average annually of one million berring, eight thousand shad each, be ides numerous bunches of rock and perch. The creeks are mainly fished with trap nets, and all do a lucrative business. There are several ducking clubs, which average 800 ducks apiece. This is good ducking when we consider how scarce they have been for the past two or three years. And it is no uncommon thing to see people without any pretensions eating canvas back, red heads and other ducks with the same composure as a mountaineer would a piece of middling bacon. The people as a general thing are in moderate circumstances But they are noted for their kindness and unbounded hos pitality, and there is scarcely a house in this neighborhood where you couldn't get a cup of tea, corn bread or broiled chicken. Churches, schools and mills are located through the county at convenient distances, and by rail Washington, Alexandria and other cities can be reached in an hour and a half; and the writer would advise those who are in search of homes to locate in this section, as land can be bought from 75 cents to $10 an acre Yours truly,

The Memorial Bridge

A bridge from the foot of New York avenue across the Potomac, and giving direct access to the nation's great burlal ground at Arlington, is an improvement which was first mooted in connection with the proposed celebration in this city of the discovery of America by Columbus. It was originally suggested that over the river at its most suitable point, a bridge should be built which would be worthy of this Capital city and this great nation, and which should take this great nation, and which should take historical interest from the fact that it was ommemorative of General Grant and the ending beroes of the war. Though the House of Representatives has practically de eided that the World's Fair is to be held in Chicago, the national quadri centennial cel ebration will no doupt be held in Washing-ton. Among the features of that celebration, the erection and unveiling of a statue to Columbus and the construction of the mem orial bridge have been arranged for. Sub-sequently to this decision the Grand Army men of the Department of the Potomac tock the matter under consideration. In effect Arlington has become the cematery of our nation's heroes. The humblest man in the Dis tion's heroes. The humblest man in the District, who gathers glory from the fact that he fought for his country under Grant. Sherman or Sheridan, cherishes the hope that at last his mortal remains may be permitted to rest smil the graves of his honored comrades. But for years complaint has been made in regard to the inaccessibility of Arlington, The only means of approach have been by either the Aqueduct or the Long bridge. Both necessitate routes that are round about, awkward and inconvenient. A new, more serviceable and also a more direct bridge and roadway are required.

If the Grand Army men take the matter up and roadway are required.

If the Grand Army men take the matter up in carnest and push it they can no doubt get the bridge. In like manner if the National Board of Promotion urges its construction so that it shall have a commemorative significance in 1892 they will probably carry their point. But if they join forces and energies their success will, of course, be oubly assured. Best of all, if our citizens should agree as one man about this very desirable improvement, the New York Avenue Memorial bridge would soon be an accomplished fact.—
